

Weekly Learning Reflections

Good afternoon class Astute & families!

This week, our exploration of newspaper reposts have come to an end, where we now begin to type them up in neat. Before this final step, the children used their evaluating skills to edit and improve their work against the success criteria – also making sure our spellings are correct.

In Maths, we have learned a new skill – adding and subtracting fractions. We also applied our existing knowledge of fractions to solve new problems – including The Big Problem. ‘What can I do to help myself?’ is a common question I think the children are sick of hearing and answering by now! Nonetheless, when I see the children being independent and resourceful learners by collecting equipment they need or drawing bar models and number lines in books, I know that it will always be an important one.

As you already know, it was World Book Day yesterday and I was amazing to see the efforts that had gone into the children’s book characters! We had an awesome morning exploring our visiting author Guy Bass, who earlier on today, read to the children and signed books. I do hope you enjoy looking at the photos we took, in small groups and as a class 😊

Now, it wouldn’t be a Dojo post without updating you on our Roman topic! The children have absolutely loved their history learning on the Romans so far, and this week has been the cherry on the cake! After a few trips to Dunelm, I had managed to collect enough cardboard for the children to create 1 large shield with a learning friend. Then, we researched different shield designs and began painting. Next week, we will get into the character of a Roman practise the testudo and the wedge formation.

And now for the starts of the week!

Teach star goes to Chase! Over the last week, Chase has contributed some amazing, thought-provoking and stimulating answers to class discussions. A true philosopher in the making! Chase has also worked very hard this week, reflecting on his work and persevering to improve. Well done Chase!

Class star of the week goes to Joshua! Joshua has been using his creative thinking to inspire his peers and to encourage them to think ‘outside of the box’ – in particular our history lessons. Joshua is a fantastic team player and is very supportive to all of his peers. Well done Joshua!

I hope you have a brilliant weekend 😊
