

Weekly Learning Reflections

In English this week we worked on refining and finishing our animal | some of which were performed to the rest of the class today. Plaudits to Willow for an excellent dramatic presentation. We also discussed our debate topic, about whether the voice of a commoner is as important as a monarch. We thought about it from a historical context based on our history work and also in a modern context, linking back to ideas about democracy from the autumn term. This also connected to our history work this week, where we looked at the inventories of people living in Tudor times. It was fascinating to see the children evaluate the contents of a Tudor person's home in relation to their own, trying to work out what kind of life they would have had.

In maths we started to look at turns, angles and degrees and yesterday had a go at using protractors for the first time. The class took to this very quickly under the expert tuition of Mr Masson and became very accurate angle measurers. We continued with our life cycles unit in science by looking at insects and our PE units concluded with tournaments in badminton and rugby. We also found time to finish off our DT unit by writing some explanations for our animal monitor design choices. This afternoon the class enjoyed their star school choices and we finished off by announcing Maya as this week's class voted star of the week, and Amie mine.

Have a fantastic Easter break and we'll start again in two weeks.
